onetouch hero 2010 hspa kernel For instance, I will not buy the hero two, and I don't like the hero one either, which can be skipped for sure. I am also not interested in 2. It should be possible to select all unmet dependencies, but I can't find a suitable option. I did find an option to clear the cache - that did it! This now allows me to go into the computer and all work fine - however it just won't go back to 2.0. It has a little soft reboot icon in the system tray which turns red on reboot, and then goes back to green. This causes some issues as I can't use USB and USB media (partition? don't know) like headphones as it keeps auto logging in on boot. I have searched the forums, google, and I can't find anything to address this issue. Other thing I noticed (might be wrong) is that when I go into the dialer and press a key, it causes it to autorun (which is how I shut down in the first place) so pressing a key starts up the computer. I don't think it's a matter of not having a driver for the OS. I would assume it's a hardware issue, as the hardware all seems to be intact. I am a little surprised that the upgrade took over a year to be released. My old O2 handset didn't take a year and they released 3.0. And an important thing is, why is there no official firmware update option in Windows? What you are saying would be true if you were on Windows, however the firmware update is required to bring the phone up to a version which is compatible with the kernel. Once the kernel is updated (4.5.1) it is still not possible to upgrade the firmware on Windows. However, the firmware is available on the fc-lite website. It is possible to update the firmware on Linux. If you have tried this, please share your findings with us. Windows (Phone 7) only requires that the kernel version is higher than 1.1.0 ( If this was not the case, Windows could not work on your device, as it requires the loader to be booting the kernel. If you are on an older kernel, you must choose to downgrade the kernel version. 82157476af
